Hesse follows a group of amateur treasure hunters who believe they have finally found the train. The team, led by a Polish farmer named Piotr Koper, has been searching for the train for years, and they are convinced that they are on the verge of making a major discovery. But as the team digs deeper, they begin to realize that the truth about the train is more complicated than they ever imagined.

Hesse's book is a thrilling tale of adventure, history, and mystery. She weaves together the stories of the treasure hunters, the historians, and the survivors of the Holocaust to create a gripping narrative that is both informative and suspenseful. They Went Left is a must-read for anyone interested in World War II, history, or the search for lost treasure.

The Nazi Gold Train

The Nazi gold train is one of the most famous unsolved mysteries of World War II. The train is said to have been carrying a vast fortune in gold, art, and other valuables looted by the Nazis during the war. The train disappeared in 1945, and its whereabouts have remained unknown ever since.

There have been many theories about the fate of the Nazi gold train. Some believe that the train was destroyed by the Allies during the war. Others believe that the train was hidden by the Nazis, and that it is still buried somewhere in Poland or Germany. Still others believe that the train was taken to South America by Nazi war criminals.

The mystery of the Nazi gold train has fascinated treasure hunters and historians for decades. In recent years, there have been a number of expeditions to search for the train, but none have been successful. However, the hunt for the Nazi gold train continues, and it is possible that one day the train will be found.

The Hunt for the Nazi Gold Train

The hunt for the Nazi gold train has been going on for decades. Treasure hunters from all over the world have searched for the train, but none have been able to find it. In recent years, the hunt for the train has been led by a group of Polish farmers who believe they have finally found the train's hiding place.

The Polish farmers have been searching for the train for years, and they are convinced that they are on the verge of making a major discovery. They have found a number of artifacts that they believe are related to the train, including a Nazi railway car and a cache of gold coins. The farmers have also found a tunnel that they believe may lead to the train's hiding place.

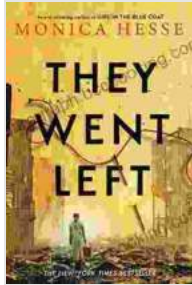

The Polish farmers' claims have been met with skepticism by some historians and treasure hunters. However, the farmers are convinced that they are on the right track. They are continuing to search for the train, and they are hopeful that they will one day find it.
