The poems in Ubiquitous are divided into four sections: "Survivors," "Thrivers," "Endurers," and "Hope." The "Survivors" section features poems about animals that have faced near extinction, such as the American bison, the California condor, and the whooping crane. The "Thrivers" section celebrates animals that have adapted to live in extreme environments, such as the Arctic fox, the desert tortoise, and the sea turtle. The "Endurers" section features poems about animals that have survived despite human encroachment on their habitats, such as the urban coyote, the barn owl, and the monarch butterfly. The "Hope" section offers a message of hope for the future of the natural world, despite the challenges it faces.

Sidman's poems are a powerful reminder of the interconnectedness of all living things. They celebrate the beauty and resilience of the natural world, and they inspire us to protect it for future generations.
